

You have just returned from a visit with your doctor. You have seen your doctor because you noticed that you had a lump on your side. The lump developed rather rapidly and you responded immediately. Unfortunately, your doctor ran numerous tests and confirmed the worst. You have cancer. Some other professionals, you are going to die and soon. You have one year to live according to your doctor. He warned you to not make any rash, impulsive decisions, but requested that you do whatever will make you happy this next year. You will not really experience any pain or discomfort this next year. You will probably die suddenly a year from now from a rupture of your organs.

Your task in this exercise is to try to figure out the things that you really want to do in the next year. "Where will you live?" "What will you do?" "Where will your money come from and how will you spend your time?" In short, what are the things that will make you happy? What are your goals for the year? Think about it and write them below.
